Safety Minute—AED Basic Care / Maintenance

An automated external defibrillator (AED) is a small, portable medical device that generates a shock that can jolt an irregularly beating heart into beating correctly. To ensure AEDs function properly when needed, regular inspections are required.

Most brands of AED units perform periodic self-tests. This will vary by brand and model. Many models will emit an alarm if there is an issue found during a self-test. The designated people maintaining an AED should check that the batteries and pads are intact and have not reached the expiration date. Many AEDs have a battery-life indicator. This should be checked as part of the routine inspection. Order replacements well in advance of any expiration date. Some AED batteries have an “Install By” date instead of an expiration date. Know when batteries need replacement and be sure to document that information. The manufacturer will have this information available. Keep in mind that environmental conditions (e.g., heat, humidity) might affect the AED, batteries, pads, and electrodes.

It’s rare, but recalls of AEDs and their components do occur. Register your AED and components to receive recall notices.

After any AED use, the pads must be replaced, as AED pads are single-use only. Check with the AED manufacturer and battery supplier for recommendations on battery replacement. There might be companies in your area that service AEDs for a fee.

To ensure readiness for use in the case of a sudden cardiac arrest, understand how to care for and maintain your AED, and ensure AED inspections are done regularly.

Be aware of and share the location of the nearest AED to your meetings and events.

New Badge in the Test Lab

Military Service and Veterans

Overview: The Military Service & Veterans Badge invites Scouts to explore the values, history, and human stories behind military service. Designed to deepen understanding and foster respect, this badge connects Scouts with the heritage of our Armed Forces and the individuals who have served our nation with courage and commitment.

Through hands-on learning, meaningful conversations, and active community involvement, Scouts develop a richer appreciation for service, leadership, peace, and patriotism.

Scouting America has been working to migrate payment log functionality to Scoutbook Plus as part of the greater migration away from Scoutbook Legacy. In doing so, the decision was made to move away from Paypal and integrate with Scouting America's payment platform owned by Stripe.

Payment Log functionality is scheduled go to live 4/13, at which point the payment log functionality in Scoutbook Legacy will be turned off.

Units that want to allow online payments will need to create an account with Stripe in their Unit Settings to turn on online payment capability in Scoutbook Plus. Youth and adults who pay unit charges online through Scoutbook Plus will see a 3% processing fee.
